LOCAL AREA INFORMATION

At the time of the 2006 census, Camberwell had a population of 19,637. Comprising, Melbourne's well-known Burke Rd shopping strip and the beautiful historic Rivoli cinema, Camberwell is a popular area to live. Its accessibility to entertainment, public transport, the CBD and quality education makes it a natural choice.

It is part of the City of Boroondara, the local government area with the lowest socio-economic disadvantage index in Australia. There is almost no industrial land in Camberwell, and commercial uses are concentrated near the Burke Road precinct, which has long been one of the busiest in suburban Melbourne. House prices in Boroondara are well above the metropolitan median and those in the Prospect Hill precinct are several times the Boroondara median.

HISTORY

Camberwell was named after the South London district of Camberwell where the three main roads also converge. The Prospect Hill area that is adjacent to the railway station and is the oldest part of the suburb. The original subdivision was relatively generous blocks, which were quickly filled with fine Victorian and Edwardian houses. Due to its hilly topography, many east-west streets in the Prospect Hill area have an excellent view of Melbourne's central business district.

Though the area was originally agricultural, Camberwell is now one of the most well established of Melbourne's 'middle-ring' suburbs.
